Clerk of an Arizona Court Sees the President

IN BEHALF OF JUDGE DOAN

Against Whom Charges Have Been Preferred.

MAYOR FAGAN AT LUNCHEON

President Declines Invitation to Attend Vaughn Class Banquet-Hawaii Needs Laborers.

George B. Wilcox, who was an officer it the Rough Riders, saw the President today m behalf of Judge Fletcher M. Doan of the second judicial district of Arizona. Mr. Wilcox said he understood that charges had been filed at the Department of Justice against Judge Doan, and he came to Wash ington to get a look at them and to do what he could to meet them. "I am the clerk of the court over which Judge Doan presides." sald Mr. Wilcox, "and there is no better man or Christian in the country. I suppose that some person or persons have lost a lawsuit and have taken out their spite in this way. In my opinion it is a case of sour grapes. I have not seen the charges, but I got an order from the President permitting me to review them at length." It is understood that an emissary of the Department of Justice is engaged in making an investigation of the charges.

The Department of Justice is said to keep a large force busy investigating charges against various officials. It has become popular to turn in charges against everybody and the next step is to send out an examiner to find out the accuracy of these charges and to listen to the "knocks" that are handed around.

At luncheon with the President today were Mayor Fagan and George L. Record, corporation counsel of Jersey City. Mayor Fagan has taken high rank as a reformer, having defeated the republican and dem ocratic machines in every contest he has a second term. He has filed with the civil service commission charges of political activity against a number of postmas-ters in New Jersey, and a report has been made to the President by the civil service commission. The matter was discussed at the luncheon today

Invited by the Vaughn Class.

The Vaughn Bible class of Calvary Baptist Sunday school, one of the largest classes in the world, presented the President a beautiful invitation to be present and speak at the annual banquet of the class, which takes place in February. The President said he was sorry he could not be present, but he would write a letter. Bell, and there were present F. W. Vaughn, founder and teacher of the class; Dr. E. C. Rice, secretary, and H. L. Davis. Representative Bartholdt of Missouri saw the President and urged him to appoint Dr. W. C. Teichmann of St. Louis as consul at introduced to the President Mgr. Gouverd, an unattached bishop of the Catholic Church of Paris and former confessor of the royal family of France, together with Mr. DeTonneay of New York and J. F. Bancroft of Minnesota.

The President shook hands with Thomas G. Earl of Lytton, British Columbia. Mr. Earl was a '40er, and went from New Jersey to California in the days of gold mining. He has remained on the Pacific coast ever since, but is now a citizen of British Representative Madden of Illinois gave the President a cabinet of pen drawings and photographs, the work of J. Elsworth Representative Longworth of Ohio saw the President on a matter of business.

Hawaii Needs Laborers.

A. L. C. Atkinson, secretary of Hawaii, was among the President's visitors this morning. Mr. Atkinson is now on his way to Portugal, where he will make some investigations about immigration and other matters of interest to Hawaii. He secured letters of introduction and recommendation from the President.

Hawaii needs laborers, and it has been found that the Portuguese are the most satisfactory of all on the sugar plantations of the islands. It is presumed that the object of the visit of Mr. Atkinson is to induce im-migration of Portuguese to the islands, where they are well paid and kindly Brooklyn Appointments.

There was a long conference at the White House last night over Brooklyn appointments, those present with the President being Timothy Woodruff, former lieutenant governor of New York, and at present republican leader of Brooklyn, and Representatives Dunwell, Law, Calder and Waldo. The President has refused to reappoint Thomas Sharkey as surveyor of the port of New York because of alleged evasions of the civil service, and the matter of agreeing upon some other man is giving the Brooklyn republicans some concern. A list of names has been submitted to the Pres-ident. Representatives Dunwell, Law and Waldo have united in pressing the name of F. J. H. Kracke, republican leader of the eighteenth district, while Representa-tive Calder has been urging Rudolph C. Fuller.
Mr. Woodruff has not yet submitted a recommendation, but when he does so it is probable the President will accept it. Woodruff remained with the President from nearly 9 o'clock last night until close to midnight, when he returned to New York. Not only were the Brooklyn appointments discussed with the Brooklyn leaders, but the situation in New York was gone

Mr. Woodruff's name has been mentioned to succeed ex-Governor Odell as chairman of the state republican committee, but Mr. Woodruff stated last night that under no circumstances would he accept the place. His large business connections would pre-vent his doing so, he said. He would not be able to give the position his time. His selection would be gratifying to a goodly number of people.

Mr. Woodruff expressed himself as being opposed to any special meeting of the republican state committee for the purpose of deposing of State Chairman Odell.

Ambassadorial Nominations Sent In. The President today sent the following nominations to the Senate:

State-Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary: Luke E. Wright, Tennessee, to Japan; David E. Thompson, Nebraska, to Mexico; Lloyd C. Griscom, Pennsylvania, to Brazil.

MILWAUKEE POST OFFICE NOT FOR CORTELYOU'S MAN.

Special Dispatch to The Star.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., January 22 .- The Milwaukee post office contest, now settled. has developed a new phase of the Post Office Department's new system of naming postmasters, and incidentally has shown how this system can be beaten. It was only by the most strenuous efforts of the representatives, however, that the local office was finally secured for the candidate of one of the two local representatives. It had been expected that Representative Otjen would nominate William I. Greene, but Mr. Otjen determined upon Wade H. Richardson. Representative Stafford then nominated Mr. Greene. Friends of other candidates brought pressure to bear at Washington, and to settle the trouble Mr. Cortelyou found that a friend of his, D. C.

Owen, was Stafford's second choice.

In this event he secured the approval of Owen and the appointment was ready to be sent to the senators, when Otjen went to the President. He managed to get the appointment held up and resumed work for Richardson. He soon found, however, that the Post Office Department was determined to secure the office for Owen, if possible, Owen having been a close friend of H. C.

Euchered Out of Decision.

A split between the representatives gave Cortelyou the final decision. As Owen was personally opposed by Otjen, it soon became evident that Stafford and Otjen must unite to prevent the appointment of Cortelyon's choice. So the representatives united and Mr. Otjen has the promise of the President that Greene will be named. Though a defeat for Otjen, this appointment is better, from his standpoint, than the naming of Owen.

Locally this is regarded as a defeat for the new policy of Cortelyou, which has caused considerable comment among rep-resentatives, who felt that the Post Office Department to name postmasters was an infringement on their just patronage.

ESSENTIAL AGE.

Men Are as Young or as Old as They Want to Be.

I am utterly incapable of giving suitable names to dogs and other domestic animals, and thus, while it was easy to name my fox terrier Jill, because somebody else had named her twin brother Jack, I could think of nothing for the kitten that had been born on the same day, and she remains Puss, which anyhow is true, if not talented. Jill and Puss were friends from the very first, but Jill began to grow up the sooner, and wanted to play with Puss while the latter was still too wobbly to be capable of much leg exercise. Then she caught Jill up in the matter of essential age, and for six months or so they were both children, and used to play together till they were utterly tired out, and lay down in Jill's basket, an inextricable mass of coiled and embracing paws. Then Jill's essential age took an other spurt; she suddenly discovered that she was the sole and responsible head of my establishment, and that everything had to be done under her immediate supervision. The invitation, an expensive one, bound in morocco leather, was presented by J. W. Bell, and there were present F. W. U.S. hurried into the dining room to see that breakfast was nicely laid, and then rushed out to bark at the tradesmen. Thus it was hard to find time to play with Puss. when she snatched a few moments for this Barmen.

Ex-Gov. Frank C. Black of New York

she wore a preoccupied air, and would stop suddenly, even while they were licking each paid his respects to the President, but did not talk about New York politics, remain-Puss' essential age had not moved, though as many days had passed over her sooty head as over Jill's white one. Then Jill had a family of pupples, and perhaps this affected her brain; for, instead of adding the cares of a matron to those of the discreet management of my house, she became in a few months a mere child again. Her family was in due course removed, but she did not care; she wanted only to play, and the housekeeping might go to rack and ruin for all the attention she bestowed on it. Puss, of course, was delighted, and all that summer they raced over the garden beds and played at being tigers in the grass till exhaustion supervened.

Then, suddenly, the essential age of Puss altered. Up till now she had been a kitten; the clock had stood still for her. But now the hards of it flew round so fast that they were invisible, and in about a week she was a sedate, demure old lady, who, one would say, had seen trouble. She did not want to play any more at all; she not want to play any more at an ane slapped Jill on the face when the latter attempted to. The two were born on the same day, yet, except for a few months, they were never the same age. First Jill was old, and then Puss, and now Jill is dreadfully young.

The same disconcerting phenomenon ap-

The same disconcerting phenomenon ap-The same disconcering phenomenon appears in the ages of "self and friends." To measure age by years is as completely off the point as if we tried to measure it by inches, and said that people six feet high were old and people four feet high were young. For years have nothing to do with essential age; the essential age of every-body is the age which he feels himself to be. Yet over this it is possible to fall into a most ungraceful error; for one's age is the age which one feels, not—which is far different, and yet so close—the age one wishes to feel, and to attempt to behave in the manner of any age is a disastrous un-dertaking. Yet many do, and to attempt to assume either age or youth without sincer-ity to back it is as ridiculous as to attempt to behave in the way that one's actual years indicate. For there is nothing more awful—the word is used advisedly, as de-noting that which moves pity and terror in the onlooker—than to see a man or a woman behaving in the manner of the age which they wish to be. A gristy kitten whisks rheumatically about, with sensity and gruel in its eyes. Or, on the other side, how equally dreadful to see some one really young at heart aping the slow gravity which come with assential years. Puss ity which comes with essential years. Puss, anyhow, with the frank kincerity of an animal, does not attempt that. She may wish to be young, and I see vague jealousy in her face when Jill challenges her to play; but she will not be a grisly kitten, and merely slaps Jill's face, which so few months ago she used to lick in an ecstasy of affection. External causes, a cold in the head, or typhold fever, or, on the other hand, a state of riotous health, may for the time alter one's essential age, making one older or younger, as the case may be, and older or younger, as the case may be, and there is, as far as I know, only one safe guide as to the fixing of one's essential age. The habit of mind that looks forward into the future is young; the habit that looks back and muses over the past and thinks about last year is old. Those who do both in roughly equal proportions are in the prime of life, whatever number of years they may have lived. they may have lived.

Neither the style, the quality nor the desirability of these Raincoats is in the least disparaged by the very low price at which they are now marked.

They are made of black and white fancy mixtures, in a smart double-breasted box-front style, and the back is trimmed with six pleats. Belted round waist. Collarless effect, fashioned high up in the neck, trimmed with four rows of silk soutache. Buttoned with self-cloth buttons.

Large sleeves, made with turn-back cuffs, trimmed with braid to match collar. All sizes in the lot up to 44. Each garment bears the water-proof guarantee stamp.
